FUNNY MEN

Even the intimate relation between the giggle and the goatee? Charlie Chaplin wears a mustache. It twitches and a smile goes, twitching its way around the corners of his eyes. Chester Conklin has a lip adornment, and it perhaps is the most essential part of his makeup. In the old days Max Ambrose used to wear his hirsute attraction to indicate dark villainy. Now it indicates laughter.

Hank Mann is another who exhibits a mustache with his mirth. On glancing and giggling exception among the slapstick artists is Patty Arbuckle. The only time whiskers ever touched his virgin lips was when he tried to kiss the bearded lady in a circus. Patty's just finished comedy. It's called "The Butcher Boy" and introduces Joseph Stevens, a stage notable and late of "Captain Kidd, Jr." as the female lead.

E. H. Sothorn, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Charles Dana Gibson and others of such wide and large interests are on the advisory committee of the Photoplay league which denies that it is an "uplift" movement in the usual sense of those words and claims to be furthering better and more artistic movies for the simple and solid reason that there are the sort of movies people want.

It is reported that New York policeman tried recently to stop traffic for Jane Lee, movie starlet. He explained that it was his first day at that particular corner, that he did not realize he was keeping a child-wonder waiting and that in future he would see that New York waited decorously while Miss Lee crossed the street.

Two small boys watching Theda Bara being photographed in one of her pictures were much disturbed. Suddenly one shrieked: "Naughty, you're flirting." As that Miss Bara laughed and spoiled the picture.

MYERS THEATRE.

"Twin Beds" Here Soon.

The play that is making all the world laugh, "Twin Beds," will be presented at the Myers theatre, on Sunday, April 22, by A. S. Stern and company, the enterprising firm of managers who have so many successes to their credit. There can be no question of the popularity of this hilarious comedy, it ran for a solid year in New York, played for six months in Australia and is now in its second year in London, while early productions are announced for Paris, Berlin, Petrograd, Rome, Madrid, South America, South Africa and Japan. "Twin Beds" earned its easy international favor on four major counts—it was clean and wholesome, it had incomparably amusing situations, built upon each other thick and fast; it had scintillating lines, new wit and new slang; and it had brilliantly satirical characterization. All these merits will be enhanced in the local presentation by a finely balanced cast of comedians, among whom are J. Morris Morrison, William Weston, Louis Albern, Warren Hastings, Marguerite Rissier, Antoinette Rochie, Elizabeth Stafford, Martha McGraw and others.

MYERS THEATRE.

Irish Beauty is Hodge's Leading Lady.

When Gertrude Hitz was lured from the stage by the siren voice of Cupid, William Hodge sent it once for Miriam Collins to take her place, and which time, Miss Collins, as the sweet heart of John Otis, in "Fixing Sister," the comedy-drama in which the distinguished star will be seen, Myers theatre on Tuesday, April 24th, has repeated the signal success she won as "Love" in George Hobart's morality play, "Experience."

Histrionic ability is the birthright of Miss Collins for she is the daughter of Miriam O'Leary, the distinguished actress who was for so long affiliated with the historic Boston Museum Stock. Artistic growth has come to the younger Miriam logically for she began her stage career when but a child, since which time she has played in the support of Viola Allen in "The Herford," again with Miss Allen in "The Daughter of Heaven," stepping from a succession of minor roles into fame through her creation of the unsophisticated maiden who was the veritable embodiment of the Springtime of youth in the role of "Love" in the New York production of the Hobart spectacle.

HEAR THE BIRDIES SING TO BE A PRIMA DONNA

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Los Angeles, April 14.—Listen to the birds and learn to sing. Try to catch and put into musical notation the clear, vibrant joyous calls of the meadowlark and the mocking bird. Go where you will, in the big outdoors, land or water, and learn from the greatest music master in the world—Nature.

Here's the unique "teachology" of a brilliant Los Angeles woman who bids fair to catch the eye of the nation with her simple solution for developing one of the primal instincts of man—love of music. She is Carrie Stone Freeman, state chairman of music for the Los Angeles and southern districts of the California federation of women's clubs.

But what will it avail the Dogers to plug up the hole at short if a new gap is torn in the infield at third base? From all indications just such a gap will be made if Prexy Elberta doesn't hurry up and get Mike Mow to stitch his John Hancock to a Brooklyn contract.

If you are looking for an investment read what is offered in the want columns.

venile lead in "Her Father's Keeper" appears to have established himself firmly in the good graces of the famous creator of "Manhattan Madness" and "Fifty-Fifty," for he is being featured in the current production, and will also have prominent parts in forth-coming releases under Dwan's personal supervision.

Born in County Clare, Ireland, about twenty-eight years ago, Devereaux came to this country with his parents as a lad, and received his education at Phillips Exeter Academy and Georgetown University. He is five feet eleven inches tall, and by systematic athletics keeps himself trained down to 142 pounds, fighting trim.

Besides being an outdoor enthusiast, capable of playing a good game of golf or doing the trudgeon crawl at a professional clip, Devereaux writes fiction and verse with a perseverance that should land him among the creators of best-sellers one day. He is now hard at work on a scenario that Dwan has put the stamp of approval upon.

Parrots make Ann Murdock furious. She says they can talk faster than she can.

Gladys Brockwell is beginning the cultivation of a small orange grove near her home.

A ROMANCE OF
THE LEWIS AND CLARK EXPEDITION

By Emerson Mough,
Author of "The Mississippi
Shoals," "Fifty-four Forty-eight,"
Etc.

Copyright, 1916, by Emerson
Mough.

A deep sigh rose as if in unison all along the table. The event was too large for instant grasping. There was no applause at first. Some—many—did not understand; not so certain others.

The miniature from Great Britain, the minister from Spain, Aaron Burr, and a few other men acquainted with great affairs, prominent in public life, turned and looked at the president's tall figure at the head of the table and then at that of the silent young man whom Mr. Jefferson had publicly honored.

The face of Aaron Burr grew pale. The faces of the foreign ministers showed sudden consternation. Theodosia Alston turned, her own eyes fixed upon the grave face of the young man sitting at her side, who made no sign of the strong emotion possessing his own soul.

"I have given you my news," the voice of Mr. Jefferson went on, rising now, vibrant and masterful, fearless, compelling. "There you have it, this little message, large as any ever written in the world. The title to that western land has passed to us. We set our seal on it now. Cost what it may, we shall hold it so long as we can claim a flag or a country on this continent. The price is nothing. Fifteen millions means no more than the wine or water left in a half empty glass. It might be fifty times fifteen millions and yet not be one fiftieth enough. These things are not to be measured by known signs or marks of value. It is not in human comprehension to know what we have gained; hence we have no human right to boast. The hand of Almighty God is in this affair. It was he who guided the fingers of those who signed this deed to the United States of America."

"That Providence who has given us all needed instruments and agents to this point in our career as a republic has given us yet another, and the last one needed. Tomorrow my friend, my special messenger, Captain Meriwether Lewis, starts with his expedition. He will explore the country between the Mississippi and the Pacific—the country of our dream and bliss. It is no longer the country of any other power—it is ours."

"Tomorrow, I give you a toast—Captain Meriwether Lewis!"

CHAPTER VII.

The Great Conspiracy.

THE sparkling dinner was at an end, presided by the president, who had sat in company at table. It could be called little else—break from the table. The atmosphere filled with stimulating guests, excited, festal, exulting.

Meriwether Lewis, anxious only to escape from his social duties that he might reach his chief, felt a soft hand on his arm and turned. Theodosia Alston was looking up at him.

"Do you forget your friends so soon? I would add my good wishes. It was splendid, what Mr. Jefferson said—and it was true!"

"I wish it might be true," said the young man. "I wish I might be worthy of such a man."

"You are worthy of us all," returned Theodosia.

"People are kind to the condemned," said he sentimentally.

At the door they were once more close to the others of the diplomatic party who had sat in company at table. The usual crush of those clamoring for their carriages had begun.

"My dear," said Mr. Jefferson, "I shall, if Mr. Alston will permit, ask you to take her up in your carriage with you to her home. I am to go with Mr. Burr."

The Spanish minister made similar excuse to his own wife. Thus Theodosia Alston left Meriwether Lewis for the second time that day.

It was a late conference, the one held that night at the home of the vice president of the United States. Burr, cool, calculating, a ways in hand, sat and weighed matters beyond repair. His keen mind saw now and seized the advantage for which he waited.

"That day right, gentlemen, both of you," he began, leaning forward. "I would not blame you if you never went to the White House again."

"Should I ever do so again," blazed the Spanish minister. "I will take my own wife in to dinner on my own arm and place her at the head of the table, where she belongs. It was an insult to my sovereign that we received to-day."

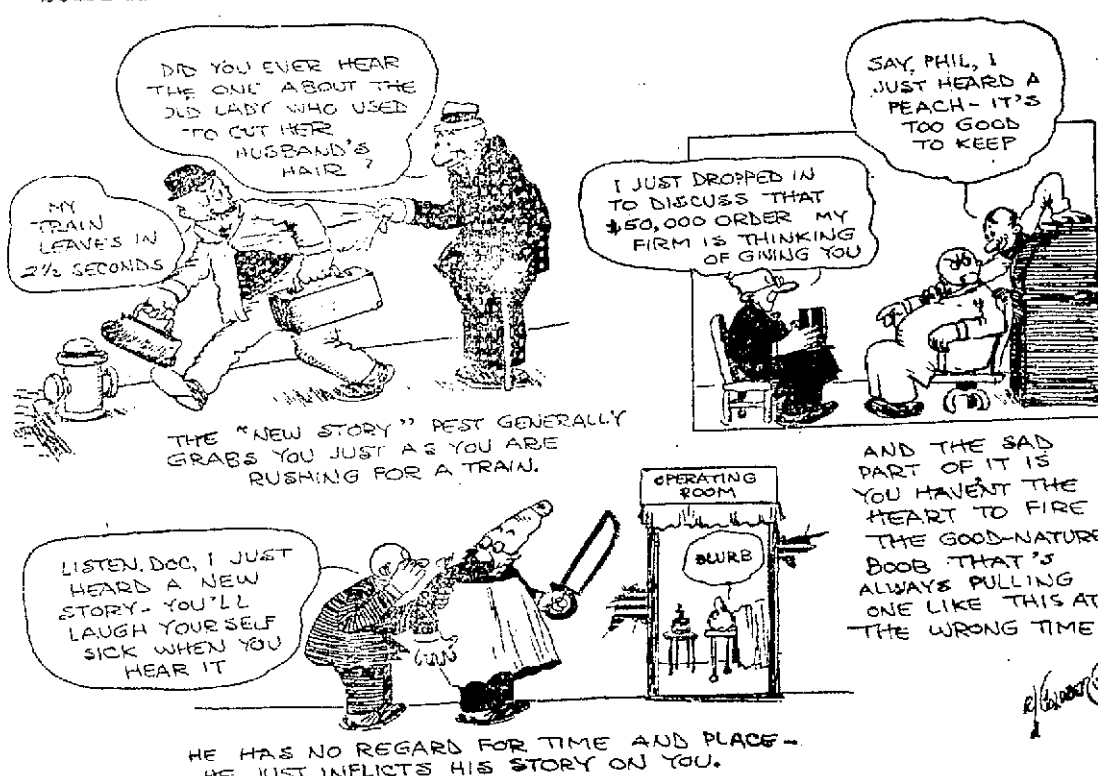

"As much myself, sir," said Mr. Meriwether. His brows contracted, his face flushed still with anger. "I shall know how to answer the next invitation which comes from Mr. Jefferson. I shall ask him whether or not there is to be any repetition of this sort of thing."

"So much for the rule of the plain people," said Burr as he laid the tips of his fingers together contemptuously.

"Yet, Colonel Burr, you are vice president under this administration," broke out Meriwether.

"One must use agencies and opportunities as they offer. My dear sir, perhaps you do not fully know me. I took this position only in order to be close to a seat of affairs. I am no such rabid adherent to democracy as some may think. I would be startled if I told you that I regard this republic as

SOME MEN THINK LIFE IS JUST ONE GOOD STORY AFTER ANOTHER.

Dinner Stories

New Orleans—I know my readers—I know that population. If this be treason, as Mr. Patrick Henry said, let us make the most of it. At least it is the intention of Aaron Burr. I stake upon it all my fortune, my life, the happiness of my family. Do you think I am sincere?"

Merry sat engaged in thought. He could see vast movements in the game of nations thus suddenly shown before him on the diplomatic board. And on his part it is to be said that he was there to represent the interests of his own government alone.

In the same even tones Burr resumed his astonishing statements.

"My son-in-law, Mr. Alston, of South Carolina, a very wealthy planter of that state, is in full accord with all my plans. My own resources have been pledged to their utmost, and he has pledged to add largely from his own. I admit to you that I sought alliance with him deliberately when he asked my daughter's hand. He is an ambitious man, and perhaps he saw his way to the fulfillment of certain personal ambitions. He has contributed $50,000 to my cause. He will have a place of honor in the new government which will be formed yonder in the Mississippi valley."

"So, then," began Yrjo, "the financing is somewhat forward? But $50,000 is only a drop."

"We may as well be plain," rejoined Burr. "None is short—you know that it is short. We all heard what Mr. Jefferson said. We must be at once. That expedition must not succeed! If that wedge he driven through to the Pacific, and who can say that young Virginian may do your two countries will be forever separated on this continent by one which will wage successful war on both. Swift action is my only hope—and yours."

"Your funds," said Mr. Merry, "seem to me inadequate for the demands which will be made upon them. You said fifty thousand?"

Burr nodded.

"I pledge you as much more—on one condition that I shall name."

Burr turned from Mr. Merry to Senator Yrjo. The latter nodded.

"I undertake to contribute the same amount," said the envoy of Spain, "but with no condition attached."

The color deepened in the cheek of the great conspirator. His eye glittered a trifle more brilliantly.

"You named a certain condition, sir," he said to Merry.

"Yes; one entirely obvious."

"What is it, then, your excellency?" Burr inquired.

"You yourself have made it plain. The infernal ingenuity of your Corsican—your devilish brain—has rolled a greater stone in our yard than could be placed there by any other human agency. We could not believe that Napoleon Bonaparte would part with Louisiana thus easily. No doubt he feared the British fleet at the mouth of the river. No doubt Spain was glad enough that our guns were not at New Orleans ere this. But, I say, he rolled that stone in your yard. If title to the Louisiana purchase is driven through to the Pacific, as Mr. Jefferson plans so boldly, the end is written now. Colonel Burr, to all your enterprises. Britain will be forced to content herself with what she can take on the north, and Spain eventually will hold nothing having on the south. By the Lord, General Bonaparte fights well. He knows how to sacrifice a pawn in order to checkmate a king."

"Yes, your excellency," said Burr. "I agree with you, but..."

"And now my condition. Follow me closely. I say if that wedge is driven home—if that expedition of Mr. Jefferson's shall succeed—its success will rest on one factor. In short, there is a man at the head of that expedition who must fight with us and not against us, like my own interest in this matter lacks entirely. You know the man I have in mind."

Burr nodded, his lips compressed.

"That young man, Colonel Burr, will go through. I know his kind. Believe me, if I know men, he is a strong man. Let that man come back from a million expedition with the map of a million square miles of new American territory hanging at his belt like a scarp torn from his foes and there will be no chance left for Colonel Burr and his friends."

"All that your excellency has said tallies entirely with our own beliefs," rejoined Burr. "But what then? What is the condition?"

your guns." The major was in an irate mood. "Oh!" he rejoined, "what the blazes does your mother say?"—London Opinion.

THOUGHT HE HAD WON CROSS, BUT HE HAD NOT

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.] London, April 14.—William Richard Campbell, a driver in the Australian army, suffered the deep humiliation of trial by court martial as a fake hero, because of a forged letter from the decorations department naming him for the coveted Victoria Cross for bravery.

Sergeant Leake, a real V. C. hero, helped in obtaining Campbell's acquittal with an impassioned plea based on Campbell's modesty, while he believed himself to be the legitimate recipient of the honor.

Campbell was feted by the town of Warrington and presented with an address by the mayor before rumors circulated casting doubt on his right to the honor. In surrendering the ribbon he said he suspected his enemies in the corps of playing a trick on him.

Soldiers attending the hearing cheered several minutes over Campbell's acquittal.

ASK ABOUT SERVICE AT FRONT

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.] London, April 14.—The thirty thousand English women who have volunteered for service at the fighting front are asking some embarrassing questions of the adjutant general's department.

They don't know whether khaki is becoming enough. Some of them want soldiers' caps instead of hats. They must salute the men officers. And they want to know whether they may smoke and whether the regular the young subaltern, who was a son of a general and never omitted to rub in that fact, was taking a message from the general to the gunners.

"If you please," he said to the major, "father says will you move tobacco ration will be given them, like the men.

How late they may be out of barracks at night, whether they must bob their hair, clean their own boots and do or not to a dozen other things are questions to which the women want an answer.

COLLECTION OF WASHINGTON RELICS UNDER HAMMER

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.] New York, April 14.—Direct descendants of George and Martha Washington will put some of their most prized heirlooms under the hammer at the Anderson galleries here a week from today.

Included in the collection is an unknown portrait of Washington's mother, which will be held at a minimum bid of $10,000. There is also an unknown portrait of Washington's wedding ring and other personal possessions of the Washington family will be put on the block.

MUNITIONS MAKING PACIFIST MUST GO TO THE FRONT

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.] London, April 14.—S. H. Thomas, an Australian living in London, will be called to the colors May 6 for garrison duty abroad, despite his conscientious scruples against killing Germans.

As manager of a small munition factory, but his conscience didn't bother him.

"I admit taking a profit from munitions which are invented to kill people," he said, "but I entered the business as a boy, when I was twelve."

That ruined his chances before the war. Conscientious objectors whose scruples against killing are recognized by the military authorities are no longer compelled to work as direct war munitionaries. But if called up they must participate in some work of national importance.

An Inexpensive Cottage Bungalow—By John Henry Newson

This is an attractive cottage of the bungalow type, which cost $2000, and should be built for from $1500 to $1800 at the present time, with good materials and workmanship. The living room, dining room and front bedroom are unusually large for a house of its size, and the kitchen arrangement is good.

The columned opening between living room and dining room and open stairway are attractive features. The dining room bay may be placed at the side or rear, and the vestibule can be omitted. For an inexpensive interior finish we recommend Georgia pine, stained and varnished, with ri sawn yellow pine floors. At a small increase in cost the living and dining rooms could be finished in natural finish oak with oak floors and the second floor in white enamel on poplar or birch, with mahogany finish birch doors. The basement has cement floor and contains hot air furnace, laundry trays, hot water heater, coal bin and fruit closet. Vitreous china or enamel iron bathroom fixtures would be suitable.

Mr. Newson will answer all questions free of charge if addressed to "Homes of Character Dept.", The Gazette.

HOT WATER IN SEVEN SECONDS

The Humphrey Instantaneous Water Heater is connected in the bath-room, requires no hot water plumbing and delivers any quantity of steaming water directly into tub or lavatory.

This water heater can be installed in old or new houses and provides an inexhaustible supply of hot water at any moment, winter or summer.
